Gotive at Microsoft Mobile DevCon in Prague

Prague, Bratislava, June 4, 2003

Gotive, the producer of Wireless Enterprise Communicators (WEC's) presented its rugged handheld communicator Gotive H41 at the Microsoft Mobile and Smartphone Developer Conference in Prague on June 3, 2003.

Gotive H41 and its concept raised a lot of interest among the conference participants, ranging from software developers and major companies officials, up to the local and international telecom providers.

"Our aim has always been to support and help to market new products, and Gotive H41 is new, capable and unique in concept and design. I am especially glad to see such a level of technology development and a market potential, which go far beyond the place of its origin," said Jiri Burian, Microsoft .NET Developer Group Product Manager. He continued "The mobile handheld Gotive H41 perfectly combines the ability to capture, process and communicate information from/to the point of activity of the mobile worker in real time, which has become an indispensable requirement for successful business solutions today and in the future."

"Strengthening the relationship with technology partners is one of Gotive's crucial points in order to deliver to the customers reliable and efficient products with maximum of technology support, whether local or international," says Anna Rosivalova, Gotive Senior PR Officer. "Moreover, being present with Microsoft on its events raises the market awareness of our products and makes it easier for our business partners to do their work."
